Geneva Business School provides Bachelor's Students With Two Degrees

Geneva, Switzerland: Geneva Business School today announced a new partnership with the University of Derby to allow bachelor's students to graduate with two degrees.

The result of this agreement provides students with two degrees: a Bachelor of International Management from Geneva Business School, as well as a BSc (Hons) in Business and Management (Top-Up) from the University of Derby.

The combination of Swiss and British degrees will enable students to excel in the global business environment and prepare them for leadership roles in their careers.

"This is a proud next step in our ongoing mission to create a world-class business education experience for our students. The University of Derby is another top-ranked business institution, so this partnership provides huge benefits to both our organizations. More important than anything, our students will reap incredible benefits by earning Swiss and British degrees," says Prof Nicola Jackman, Head of Academics, Geneva Business School.
